Anti-Chinese Meeting at Chicago.

CHICAGO, April 17.—The anti-Chinese meeting at Sean[illegible] hall last evening was a great [illegible] point of attendance [illegible] were [illegible]. It was the first of a [illegible] under the auspices of the [illegible] hope [illegible] sentiment [illegible] spread [illegible] the country and [illegible] most of the Chinese bill. Mayor Harrison presided.

His [illegible] who was warmly greeted. He had not prepared a speech but the subject was [illegible] which he had given [illegible] came from Washington [illegible] the president had vetoed the bill restricting Chinese immigration there was a feeling [illegible] in the hearts of [illegible] people west of the Alleghanies and thousands east of those mountains and there was indignation in the part of millions, especially in California, where Chinese were a nuisance. [Applause.] Hayes blundered, but Arthur went deeper. [illegible] question and felt called upon to eulogize the Chinese and to applaud them. The Chinese did [illegible] work for our benefit alone, but on account of their greed for gold, which they do not spend here but take back to China with them to enjoy. They [illegible] did not intend to say anything of a party nature but it behooved him to remark that the party [illegible] President Arthur feeling that he had committed a terrible blunder was doing his level best to correct it. [Applause.] Democrats had not sunk enough in political folly to attempt to check the passage of a restrictive Chinese bill. The question was whether we were to allow that vast hive of humanity—400,000,000 of people—to come here.

William Halley, of Sacramento, was the next speaker. He began by saying the better class of newspapers of the west were with them on this question, mentioning the Chicago Tribune. He had lived in California for eight years and he told what the Chinese were to that state. The Burlingame treaty which was responsible for their coming was a delusion, the Chinese caring nothing for it, as was anticipated. Morally, socially, physically and politically we do not need the Chinese. They were a disappointment in California, and are not desirable neighbors. They were simply imitators, originating nothing. They did not progress; on the contrary they had been going backward for 200 or 250 years. He wanted to see monopolists go. [Applause.] Leland Stanford and other plunderers had turned California into a moral and physical desert, they having no sympathy with the feelings and hopes of white workingmen. Referring to the veto, the speaker said the president's reasons were very weak. Monopolists and their hireling preachers telegraphed him to do it. These men were in league against the producing classes of the country and it was time there was a change. [Applause.] No people ever stood as much as those of California, having a remedy in their own hands. He did not think the president should have power to veto everything indiscriminately, and especially when the will of the people was distinctly expressed and clearly understood upon any measure. [Applause.] The president had no right to say that the Pacific coast should be a slop pail for Asiatics, preventing development of the country.

The following was adopted:

Whereas, There is a radical distinction in race, civilization and manner of life between the American native and the Chinese people who come to the United States merely to make money, to spend next to nothing, and to take it away with them on their homeward journey at the earliest opportunity, remaining alien and unassimilated during their stay among us, and constituting a moral and social nuisance, as proved on the Pacific coast, which is acknowledged by the anti-Chinese bill, passed by the pressure of a unanimous opinion where it was not falsified by a subsidized press in the interest of monopolists; therefore be it

Resolved, That we stigmatize the president's veto of the anti-Chinese bill as treason to civilized society, opening this continent to an avalanche of Mongolian barbarians who would degrade the standard of life of the whole white race by practices and manners of living which cannot be tolerated among the civilized nations of those enlightened times.

Resolved, That we demand from congress the reenactment of said anti-Chinese bill until it can be passed over his veto, and that we call on the people of the whole United States to relegate to private life all officeholders and all legislators who have proved themselves such traitors to their race and country.

Why the Wires wouldn't Work.

CHICAGO, April 17.—A remarkably bright aurora borealis was visible here to-night, perfectly defined, extending nearly to the zenith. The air was so charged with electricity that the telegraph would not work with batteries connected. The wire is now in operation between Chicago and New York and intermediate points and Chicago and Omaha. The wire between Chicago and St. Paul was closed on account of no warning to St. Paul to disconnect their battery. The display at St. Paul is reported very brilliant.

Bank Assignment.

INDIANAPOLIS, April 17.—The proprietors of the Central bank of Indianapolis have made an assignment to Judge Lamb, who expresses the opinion that enough can be realized from the estate to pay for settling up. The wives of the proprietors have declined not to join in dividing up their property. D. B. Cones last Friday morning mortgaged his estate for $24,000. The liabilities of the bank are said to be $200,000.

THE ASSESSMENT QUESTION.

WARM SPRINGS, April 14.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE OREGONIAN:

In THE WEEKLY OREGONIAN of the 7th inst. is an article from William Reid, in which he offers some objections to the plan suggested by me in regard to the assessment of taxes, which was to the effect that in the settlement of indebtedness there should be allowed a credit equal to the amount of taxes paid or payable thereon. Perhaps I was not sufficiently explicit in stating it, but it was only intended to be applied as a temporary expedient, to indebtedness contracted prior to the proposed change in the law. The objections he urges are well founded and had occurred to me, and such a system would be too complicated and cumbersome to be tolerated as a permanent one. There is constantly existing a large amount of indebtedness contracted under the present system of assessments, when it was understood that the amount thereof would be deducted from the assessment of the debtor and assessed to the creditor, and the rate of interest payable thereon was fixed in accordance with that understanding. A law, therefore, permitting no exemptions for indebtedness and not taxing credits would, as Mr. Reid shows, increase, virtually, the rate of interest from 1½ to 3½ per cent according to locality. This would of course, work hardship to the debtor class (would it not also be ex post facto?) and to prevent this unjust discrimination against them was the object of the plan suggested. From the very first the number would begin to decrease, and in course of time the old accounts, not a few, would run out and be renewed or paid off, so that in a few years there would be none left to which such a proviso would apply. For a permanent system I have but one to offer, the one which it seems that the solid business men and all men of good judgment are arraying themselves in support of, and that is tax nothing but real and actual property, nothing that any ordinary [illegible] man can not determine something [illegible] actual value upon a casual examination. [illegible] This system once fairly established and there would be [illegible] for general complaint except from those who grumble at having to pay tax at all. M. W. WALKER.

We [illegible] that we have feared for a long time that Mr. Lowell was hardly up to the Robinson-Cox standard as a diplomatist, and we cannot say we are surprised to find that he has at length incurred the censure of that noble assemblage of Irish patriots known as the New York board of aldermen. THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

Signs of Weakening Apparent—An Outside View.

Paris Correspondence N. Y. Sun.

For ten years past, ever since the establishment of the republic, it has been my fortune to visit Paris at intervals and to remain there a sufficient length of time to form some estimate of the public and changes in public sentiment which have taken place during the periods of my absence. But on no occasion since the death of Monsieur Thiers have I observed so marked a phase as that through which popular feeling is now passing. It has stolen gradually upon the country, gradually, perhaps, that it must be far less noticeable to a resident than a visitor, and yet it has become a subject of general remark.

When first the republic was established it was [illegible] with those conversant with the French temperament that popular government would prove itself impracticable in France, and that sooner or later it must inevitably be superseded by a monarchical system. At first the Orleanists were in the ascendant, and the idea of a constitutional monarchy under the Count de Paris sprang from the unstable foundations upon which the republic was reared. M. Thiers had been elected. Then these hopes were slowly dissipated as the rank and file of the Orleanist party proved themselves incompetent politicians, and their leaders too hesitating and timid to dare the first act which should carry them to power.

During the reign of the Duke de Broglie and the conservative republic the famous legitimist party was formed with the connivance of the cabinet, and had the Count de Chambord been willing then to waive his crotchets and adopt the tricolor flag instead of the white banner with the fleurs de lys, and make other trifling concessions, there can be no doubt that he might at that crisis have ascended the throne of his ancestors without firing a shot. The National guard had been disarmed, and the army was in the hands of a government sympathetic to such a change, but this golden moment was allowed to slip by, the conservative regime became soon afterward discredited through the inherent defects of the men who composed it and the republic started with a new lease of life, only, however, to be threatened with still greater peril.

Sufficient time had now elapsed for the popular indignation against the dynasty which had inspired France in the disasters of the Franco-Prussian war to be partially exhausted. The imperialists, daring, skillful and versed in political intrigue, had not been idle, and under the able management of the party wire-pullers now were acquiring a [illegible] consolidation. The young prince imperial [illegible] grew in years and [illegible] became known, increased in popularity, and the hopes of the Bonapartists ran high when [illegible] they were most in need [illegible] the tragical death [illegible] in Zululand.

Once more the republic has heaved a sigh of relief. One by one the rival political systems had [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] silence which [illegible] public institutions [illegible] the popular mind as to the weakness and misfortunes of those by whom they were opposed [illegible] fortune so far had given the republic increased vitality. Trade and commerce had revived, and the absence of opposition seemed to insure a certain stability to the form of government which it did not inherently possess, but which men were glad to credit it with.

The short experience it has already had of the government of Freycinet only confirms the impression that a well intentioned weak and vacillating cabinet fails to satisfy the national craving for force in the administration somewhere, and there is a growing sensation of malaise and discomfort. People feel as if they were in a ship with no one at the rudder. It is all very well so long as it remains calm, but it is not the sort of thing they desire for a permanency. They wish to keep the name of republic, but they are more convinced than ever that France cannot govern herself, and now that Gambetta is for the time effaced they are looking for the man to govern her, and they are already beginning to think that after all it will be better to give him his program and let him reign as dictator, provided he defines that he is one, which he will be careful to do rather than go in the happy go lucky way which is implied by a constantly recurring succession of weak cabinets of the Freycinet stamp.

Will Gambetta come back to power or not? is then the question of the hour. That he cannot come back without a dissolution of the chamber is certain, and till that event occurs France will be restless and uncomfortable. It is true there are other alternatives. There is the possibility of a European war and a successful general, in which case the prestige of Gambetta would pale before the glamour of military glory, and the soldier of fortune might make himself the founder of a dynasty. Or there is the possibility of the conservative politicians taking advantage of a momentary discredit which in consequence of its present weakness now attaches to the name of republic, and preparing the way for the Count de Paris, provided the Count de Chambord would retire in his favor. A number of eventualities and combinations are possible, but one fact is distinctly dominant, and that is that the whole of the republic was weaken up upon the nation and must continue to weaken unless its name can be identified with some one man who is by nature a dictator.

Time and experience have not proved that those were wrong who predicted that the French could not govern themselves. It has happened that owing to a remarkable run of luck and the absence of formidable opposition the republic has existed thanks to the prestige imparted to it by a single man. But its tenure as a name even is very precarious, while as a practical system based upon decentralization, local self government and true representative institutions it is so far as the French nation is concerned a pure chimera.

Capt. James B. Eads is the [illegible] elegant [illegible] [illegible] Now the [illegible] great engineer [illegible] known [illegible] at St. Louis. This great structure known as [illegible] signed to afford [illegible] for the manner as railways [illegible] their objective points. The estimated cost of the bridge was about $4,000,000. The work was [illegible] and there was a revised estimate and $6,000,000 was named. [illegible] there were several [illegible] The bridge was finally completed and the bill of particulars amounted to the neat little sum of fourteen millions of dollars. This was a great triumph for the able engineer and his name was uttered and his fame was blazoned by many journals throughout the land, because he had built a bridge across the Mississippi river at St. Louis for $14,000,000, so much for that.

But there was another thing to be done which required the brains of a great engineer to conceive and execute. There was a bar at the mouth of the Mississippi river to be removed in order that the ships might come and go to and from New Orleans without hindrance or delay. Who could remedy the natural defects? That was the question. Evidently the services of a great civil engineer were needed, and who was as great as Eads? So the talented man [illegible] repaired to the capital of the [illegible] and [illegible] gently insinuated to various congressmen that he could give a deep channel for the passage of ships provided the federal government would advance a sufficient number of shekels [illegible] current money of the republic, and he named the sum of $4,250,000 as the amount which his talents and capacity as a civil engineer were worth. [illegible] result was the organization of the jetty company [illegible] it was a [illegible] stock and was kept in the [illegible] probably $1,000,000 or less were expended and the [illegible] is divided out about [illegible] [illegible] made. Capt. James B. Eads was the principal stockholder and his share of the spoils amounted to about $[illegible]

But the great engineer had [illegible] for the passage of ships not less than thirty feet deep. It would prove a boon as [illegible] this distinguished civil engineer. Indeed it would perhaps afford him much more pleasure and many more ducats than was realized from the wreck of the national bank of the state of Missouri [illegible] which the great engineer might [illegible]

FOGG'S FERRY.

Miss [illegible] Madden [illegible] Davenport [illegible] Charles E. Callahan [illegible] [illegible] that is one of the [illegible] that [illegible] Thomas W. Davey of Detroit. She was born [illegible] the stage [illegible] and [illegible] in the [illegible] [illegible] and in the royal revival of [illegible] [illegible] she appeared as the young Prince [illegible] a [illegible] popular feature of the great [illegible] throughout the country she is probably best known as the original of Chip in Barney McAuley's Messenger from Jarvis Section, although she has played many parts much more worthy [illegible] talent. Miss Madden is petite, pretty and graceful, with a musical and sympathetic voice and a face that is both interesting and charming. Next season she will bloom as a full fledged star under that responsible and capable manager, Mr. John H. Havlin, who has this season put many golden dollars into the purse of John T. Raymond. Mr. Havlin has secured for his star an entirely new play from the pen of Charles E. Callahan, entitled "Fogg's Ferry," produced for the first time on any stage at the Soldiers' Home theatre in Dayton on Friday last.

The play opens in the heart of the mountains of Dakota with a bad mother of the Frochard kind, who makes things rather hot for her besotted husband and supposed daughter. After Old Ferryman gets a few sips of the [illegible] stuff he disappears below, when Bruce Rawdon, the indispensable male villain, appears, and after being left alone enters the house, returning with a locket that he has stolen from within. This locket is the proof of Chip's parentage. Gerald White, the good friend of Chip, enters and at once suspects foul play. He tries to wrest the locket from him, but the villain being the stronger of the two is about to hurl him over the cliff when Chip appears and he desists. Miss Madden in her aptness to portray the naivete of an untutored, ragged and blunt mountain girl proved herself at once a genuine favorite with her audience. Indeed the pleasing dialogue and repartee of this scene and the star's inimitable acting gave promise of something still better to follow, in which those present were, however, disappointed. To resume, Rawdon proposes for the hand of Chip, but is rejected in her blunt and charming manner. Gerald White, after a scene between the ferryman and girl, then enters just in time to save her back from chastisement by her mother, who hates to see her mopping over them books. He then receives Chip's consent to accept the position of governess of Judge Norwood's children, where she could learn herself and them too.

Bruce Rawdon then again tries to win Chip in marriage through her drunken father, but it is no go, and the first act ends with an appeal (entirely too long) to him to desist from pressing her with his attentions, and the villain turning gentleman for the present time resuming his seat with the rest, and the curtain falls. The next act plays at Judge and there remains nothing new or striking in the play beside the explosion of a torpedo by Chip and the passage of a steamer over the stage under a full [illegible] The second and third acts [illegible] but the scheming of Rawdon [illegible] scenes with Chip and Gerald ditto [illegible] Rawdon and Blanche, and the attempted [illegible] In the second act [illegible] an appointment with Chip to meet her at an old mill, where he promises to [illegible] all the mystery surrounding her. [illegible] to her word, but the miner is [illegible] in a fit of despondency upon imagining herself deserted by all, is about to hurl herself into the river, when Gerald frustrates her. He observes suspicious movements on the part of the miner and old Fogg, who are about to sink the torpedo upon Rawdon's [illegible] blow up his prospective father-in-law, who is on board a steamer just about to pass. Gerald leaves a revolver in her hand to protect herself while he looks after the two [illegible]. The old men fly after sinking the explosive. Chip sees the ship coming and as she heard the men say that a loud shock would explode the dynamite, she discharges the revolver; the dynamite explodes and the steamer steams past in safety.

In the last act we are told by the Judge that Chip has returned from college after three years of study, and that the denouement is soon to transpire. The Judge's daughter, the female villain, a virago in silks who hates everybody, then tells him that she has married Rawdon and shares the estate which her husband learned from the will belongs to Blanche Norwood. But she is not that Blanche. The assembled company is told by the dying miner, who is brought into the parlor, that Chip had been exchanged in her infancy with Blanche, and when proof is asked for, Still Bill produces the locket stolen by Rawdon at Fogg's, to the dismay of the latter, who had tried to destroy it—the only remaining proof—by throwing it in the grate, from whence it had been rescued by Still Bill. Rawdon and his wife leave snorting contempt, the latter giving him, who a few moments before was to her her father, the pleasant assurance that she hates him. The play winds up with the conventional match making. Two extra comedy characters, Still Bill and Martha, and [illegible] number of taking bon mots are introduced to enliven the action of the play, which serve their purpose satisfactorily. Bill and Chip gives cause again in the second act for which, however, Miss Madden does not appear to possess the requisite strength of voice.

Such is the play in its present shape. No one was more alert to note its effective features than the author, who conducted its presentation in person, and he will set to work at once expunging and rewriting its unattractive scenes. He would [illegible] greatly add to the attractiveness of the play as far as Miss Madden's portrayal is concerned by providing the star with characters in the mountains or the [illegible] Miss Madden aside from the few undeniably lengthy [illegible] the night was at home and won the unstinted approval of her audience. She appears to be possessed of so much chic, abandon and naivete to bring these pleasing features in the [illegible] I would be unjust to criticise the acting of the support which was composed of an impoverished company. They did very well under the circumstances, not which being noticeable in the dialogue.

"Fogg's Ferry," which it would be more proper to title "Chip" (the ferry not being visible in the only play), will not be presented again until next season. Manager Havlin is negotiating for an opening at the Park theatre, N. Y. After the needed improvements have been made by the author with Miss Madden in the cast the play will undoubtedly be a success in Johnny Havlin's words. [illegible] The programme was as follows:

YAKIMA AND THE NORTHERN PACIFIC.

WALLA WALLA, [illegible]

TO THE EDITOR OF THE OREGONIAN:

Having been [illegible] I will [illegible] [illegible] I am interesting myself [illegible] matter. But perhaps the fact that my [illegible] family and interests are all there will justify my saying a word regarding a subject of interest to us all.

During my residence at Yakima meetings have been called, speeches made, long resolutions and manifestoes adopted (by a very small vote) and numerous articles published teeming with harsh words and hard names applied to the Northern Pacific company. [illegible] the so-called land monopoly has been invoked and now a petition is in circulation and filled with the avowed object of influencing congress to declare a forfeiture of the company's land grant. Credit for all this activity belongs to Mr. J. M. Adams and Mr. Edward Whitson. Theirs the glory if such there be in it. This course may be right and this action judicious, but to me it seems not, and I have deeply regretted it. I know not the general feeling as to this petition, but in know that prior action in the matter has had the sympathy of but very few men in the county. I regret it for two reasons. First, the Cascade branch will be built in due time and by the Northern Pacific company. The people of Yakima city and county deserve and ought to have the friendship of the company. All men who have lived on the lines of railroads know how very easy it is for a railway company to build up or destroy a town, grant or withhold a thousand important favors from any locality on its line. This is too well known to need facts or argument. I do not say that Mr. Villard and his company will retaliate for the abuse received, but they will only act naturally if they do. This company in all its dealings with settlers and communities on its line has invariably pursued an extremely liberal and honorable policy.

The right to petition congress for a legitimate object is old and sacred. But I regret the position in which this action and petition place the people of Yakima county for the further reason, that in my humble judgment it makes them appear to want congress to do a wrong and illegal act: wrong because that body has no right, moral, equitable or otherwise, to grant the prayer of the petition. Illegal because to grant it would be sheer repudiation of a solemn contract.

No intelligent, unbiased person, be he lawyer or not, who reads the charter act of this company will fail to conclude that by the third section of that act congress made a present, definite, absolute grant to the company of 40 sections of land per mile where the road passes through a territory and 20 where it crosses a state. Nor will he fail to conclude that there is no provision in the act for the forfeiture of the grant or the reversion of the land or any part of it under any circumstances, to the public domain. This may seem to have been loose legislation. Yet if we inquire a little further, with a view of getting at the intention of congress in making the grant, we will find in the act these words: "If the said company make any breach of the conditions hereof and allow the same to continue upward of one year, then in such case at any time hereafter the United States by its congress may do any and all acts and things which may be necessary to insure a speedy completion of the railroad." Now it is fair to presume that congress meant something by this absolute grant and this solitary remedial provision. If its intention was to set apart irrevocably and dedicate so much of the public domain as is embraced within the grant for the purpose of insuring the building to completion of a great transcontinental highway, then the provisions of the act were considerate and its language well chosen. If congress meant anything else in the wide world it made a most consummate botch of the job.

A grant thus made cannot be legally forfeited by congress or any other power. And if the petition referred to had asked congress to enact measures to insure the early completion of the road, while it would do little any good except to grace a pigeon hole, it would compromise nobody. As it is it prays congress to repudiate a solemn contract and forfeit an absolute grant, and this too in the face of the fact that rights to the extent of many millions have vested under it. The people of Yakima can illy afford to assume this attitude before the country and the petition ought never to be submitted to congress. The people of the county want the road. Its coming is vital to their interests. They have waited long and with commendable patience. They are considerate enough to see that the Cascade branch is not the only part of the road unbuilt, and that the company is employing all the men obtainable. There is little doubt that this branch will be built as fast as the force can be had to do the work. No one is more anxious for its completion than myself, but I protest against being committed, directly or indirectly, to this futile scheme of repudiation.

A ROMANCE.

A Scene in the United States Senate Chamber in 1783.

Harper's Magazine for April.

On the 23d of December 1783 the floor of the senate chamber at Annapolis was filled to overflowing by stately dames and gentle maidens who had flocked to the capital as if the weight of state questions had been for this one hour intrusted to their wise deliberations. Washington, the mighty yet unambitious hero of the time, while still the idol of the public heart, was on that day to lay down his laurels by resigning to congress his commission as commander-in-chief of the brave little army whose triumphs he had directed and whose sufferings he had shared. Accompanied by his aids, Col. Benjamin Walker and Col. David Humphreys, and the officers appointed as escort, Washington entered the hall where the assembled congress awaited him, every manly voice among the spectators cheering and every feminine kerchief waving an enthusiasm of approval and welcome, but the cheers were hushed into breathless silence by the first words of the great hero's dignified address, to which Gen. Mifflin, as president of the senate, made an eloquent and appropriate reply. On Washington's left stood the valiant soldier, Col. John Eager Howard of Maryland, and facing Col. Howard, conspicuous among the foremost group of senators, was Gen. Read of South Carolina, the hero of this short legend of a bygone love. How little did either of these young men, strangers to one another, dream of the day to come when a son and a daughter of each were to become husband and wife—the daughter of one of the other. Many were the men whose names were already distinguished or to become historic who were present, either as members of congress or spectators of the impressive scene: Madison, Jefferson, Monroe, Lee of Virginia, Osgood of Massachusetts, Morris of Pennsylvania, McComb of Delaware and Gen. Otho Williams, Gens. Smith and Swan of Maryland. The well known Charles Carroll of Carrollton was accompanied by his two daughters, one of whom was afterward Mrs. Caton, mother of the celebrated trio of American beauties who became respectively Lady Stafford, the marchioness of Wellesley, and the duchess of Leeds.

But absorbing as was the attention given to Washington by the august assemblage of heroes and patriots who recognized in him the greatest hero and patriot of any, the young Carolinian's eyes wandered up to the gallery above, where Mrs. Washington, with her young grandchildren beside her, was seated in all the dignity and legitimate pride of the wife who crowns herself with her husband's glory. Grouped around her chair were the three Calvert sisters of Maryland, of blood royal, the family of Lord Baltimore, and never was the fame of Maryland beauty better maintained than by the contrasting loveliness of the youngest, Miss Ariana Calvert, with the more brilliant charms of her elder sister, who had been espoused during all the perils of the war both on the same evening, the one by Washington's stepson, Parke Custis, and the other by Mr. George Stuart of Maryland. It is told of these gentlemen that each received the announcement of the birth of a son—born on the same day, a year after the marriages—while on the battlefield.

But it was not the rich bloom or dark eyes of the beautiful young matrons which so riveted the attention of the young southerner that even the sublime presence of Washington was for a while forgotten. To his eyes the youngest sister was much the fairest, and he gazed up at the [illegible] young girl until the friend at his elbow, Mr. James Monroe—too thorough a Virginian not to recognize the phenomena of love at first sight—whispered her name in his ear and the offer to present him before the lady quitted Annapolis town for her home in the country. The offer was gratefully accepted, and ere the winter was half over Miss Calvert was affianced to her eager and enraptured young lover, but not alas! with the entire consent and approbation of her family and friends, and then arose the cloud which darkened the horizon of this love legend. As usual [illegible] passion youth [illegible] coldly ignored. The Carolinian was wealthy, of prominent position and [illegible] birth, and of distinguished education, but the lady was threatened [illegible] decline. She was also the youngest darling of the [illegible] old [illegible] sisters had married so well, yet remained in their midst and their family [illegible] and more reluctant that this comparative stranger should bear away their tender [illegible] to [illegible] southern home [illegible] [illegible] who had loved her [illegible] cradle and the [illegible] lover saw the [illegible] of his lady love [illegible] [illegible] her until she was indeed seriously ill. THE LATE WAR CLOUD.

The immediate possibility of war between Austria and Russia has been averted, not because the Slavs and Teutons are not ready and anxious to have at each other, but because their sovereigns are more powerful than they, and not yet ready to allow Skobeleff to lay down their respective programmes. A correspondent of the London Standard, writing from Vienna writes to that paper an extraordinary letter which shows how real the chance of war has been and how close was the risk that other powers might be brought into it. He shows that although the immediate cause of alarm was Skobeleff's Panslavist speech, for which he has been recalled and diplomatically censured, there were other signs of war and indications of trouble which may have seemed to him sufficient warrant for his indiscreet utterances. There had been a gradual movement of Russian troops to the Austrian frontier, and there had been a corresponding accumulation of troops on the Austrian side, while the traces of Panslavistic agitation and encouragement are found at almost every step in connection with the uprising in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Strongest proof of all perhaps is that the military party, both in Austria, Germany and Russia, are greatly disappointed at the course events have taken, especially at the dispatch of a new Austrian ambassador to St. Petersburg, whose duty it is to preserve the peaceful relations between the two countries, and at the cordial manifestations sent by the czar to the emperor of Germany on the occasion of the latter's birthday.

The same correspondent also forwards some very interesting information as to the readiness of the two countries for war, from which it would appear that Austria is in much better war condition than Russia. In the matter of railroad transportation Austria has the advantage. Russia has five lines of railroad to the eastern frontier, and Austria has four lines to the Russian frontier, but the distances are so much shorter that an Austrian army can march into Russian Poland much quicker than a Russian army can reach any of the Austrian outlying provinces. Another immense advantage possessed by Austria is the thorough manner in which its commissary department is organized. The description of this is interesting enough to give in the correspondent's own words:

> There is also this very material difference between the two armies, that the Austrian, since 1878, has at its disposal the so-called iron store, "Eiserner Vorrath," consisting of provisions—flour, dried vegetables, tinned meat, rice, wine, brandy, medicaments, etc.—sufficient to supply the whole war strength of 800,000 men for a period of forty-two days. These stores are constantly renewed, the older provisions being sold in peace time and fresh put in their place. They are kept in huge magazines in Vienna, Komorn (Hungary), Pesth and Laibach. These places, especially Vienna and Komorn, lie on the chief base of operations in the case of a war with Russia or Italy, and it is for no other possible wars that these preparations are made. It was not deemed advisable to keep the iron stores further to the east or south—for instance, at Cracow or any fortress near Italy—as these places would be more exposed to danger than Vienna and Komorn. From these latter centers supplies can be sent to the troops within the twenty-one days required for the arrival of the whole army at any point on the frontier. On the third day after mobilization has been ordered the border guard, taken from the nearest garrisons, will be ready to march. On the 14th day the first complete army corps will be en route, and, as already mentioned, the 21st day at the utmost will find the whole army on the war footing at its destination.

The "iron store" includes not only provisions, but rifles, munitions and uniforms, horses and wagons for the entire force of the reserve, so that the equipment and food for the entire army, active, reserve and landwehr, are in constant readiness, and as army contractors are required to keep on hand one-third more stock than the yearly amount they have contracted for, they can feed the entire army for a much longer time than the specified forty-two days. As to the iron supply this correspondent says:

> The "iron supply," if I am not mistaken, is a Prussian invention. The Prussians are accustomed to store this "iron supply" in the direction where, even at a distant future, a war may be presumed to be possible. Thus it is a fact that in expectation of a war with France the "iron supply" on the Rhine, etc., was stored in the right place as early as 1865—i. e., even before the Prusso-Austrian war. It is worthy of remark, too, that at the present moment no such supply is stored either in Germany on the line to Austria, or in Austria in the direction of Germany. In the German empire its present location is obviously in view of possible wars against France or Russia, and in Austria of a future conflict with Russia or Italy. The whole ordre de bataille, all arrangements and preparations for a war with Russia are now made in Austria, as I know for certain, and in Germany, as I have reason to believe, under the supposition that Austria and Germany would have to fight together against Russia, even should the one of the two countries have to begin while the other stands by for a time under arms.

One of the strongest reasons, however, why Russia may have been disinclined to embark in war at present is unquestionably to be found in the fact that she would have no alliance. An alliance between Germany and Austria would be Italy's golden opportunity, especially if France should join Russia, which she is not likely to do so long as it is probable that Italy will join Germany and Austria to recover some of her lost provinces. The possibility of such a combination gives check in the present situation. Meanwhile Slav and Teuton will fight on in wordy wars until their sovereigns can make new combinations.

THE "SUSPECTS" AGAIN.

The zealous American champions of constitutional liberty in Ireland are in the habit of assuming and asserting that the men arrested under the coercion act are taken on mere suspicion and clapped into jail without pretense of inquiry into their actual guilt under the provisions of the act, or of the extent of their offending. This is an error arising probably from a misapprehension as to the use of the term "suspect" as applied to the prisoners but to some extent also from the natural readiness of the leaguers and their friends to put the worst possible construction on the acts of the government. Contrary to the belief so frequently expressed, the arrests are made only after the careful collection of evidence, and it is asserted in England that in the case of the Irish-American agitators unusual pains have been taken to secure evidence of such weight as would in a civil process be deemed ample for presentment by a grand jury. It is not difficult to procure this evidence, for the orators of the land league and the workers under the "no rent" manifesto have not been at all shy or timid in their unlawful appeals. The warrant of arrest, therefore, to which Secretary Forster referred in his letter to Minister Lowell, is by no means so empty a formula as has been supposed. From recent reports it appears to be almost impossible to secure a conviction on a charge of agrarian crime. In many cases an alibi is arranged before the crime is committed, and the juries are quite ready to accept even manifestly perjured testimony which will acquit. Prosecutors and informers in these cases expose themselves to perils such as few care to brave, so that there is an increasing difficulty in procuring evidence for the crown. All these facts, of course, tend to strengthen the position of the government. If the suspects have friends who really desire their liberation, the true way to go to work for that end is to preach the gospel of peace. The posting of inflammatory proclamations, the murder of agents, and the stabbing of lambs—that is the latest phase of agrarian violence—shut the jail doors tighter.

VICIOUS PARTISAN METHODS.

The coming contest for control of the next house of representatives will be a close one, and both parties are preparing to fight every inch of the ground. The democrats confidently hope for control of the next house. Ever since 1860 they have gained largely in off years and the fight between the stalwart and Garfield factions gives them grounds for expecting losses to the republicans, especially in New York and Pennsylvania. The republicans of course hope for continued rule and in one or two states are not showing a very nice regard for the methods to be employed in retaining it. Partisan gerrymandering has been resorted to and with success. Maine, which now has three republican and two opposition, will elect her reduced delegation of four by a general ticket. These will undoubtedly be republicans, a loss of two to the democrats and a gain of one to the republicans. In Ohio the redistricting is held to be greatly to the advantage of the republicans.

Mississippi has been redistricted through the blunder of a democratic legislature in a way to give the republicans three new congressmen. There were several congressional aspirants in the legislature of that state, and with a view of cutting out the present members and helping their own chances they chiseled the state into most grotesque districts. One contains 90,000 more population than any other in the state. It is said the apportionment act which requires that each district shall contain as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants is so grossly violated in the Mississippi apportionment that the entire delegation might be excluded from the next congress if its exclusion would serve to give control of the house to either party.

YIELD OF GOLD AND SILVER.

The tables of the census bureau present some valuable statistics in reference to production of precious metals in the United States. The work of gathering this information was entrusted to Mr. Clarence King, who divided the field into three parts—the Pacific division with headquarters at San Francisco; the Rocky mountain division, with headquarters at Denver, and the eastern division, with headquarters at Newport, R. I. The figures represent the yield of each of these divisions for the year ending May 31, 1880, and they show that one-third of the gold and one-half of the silver mined during that period throughout the world are to be credited to the United States.

The total amount for the three grand divisions was $72,730,307, and of this total silver is almost one-half, or $39,436,484. At the head of the list of states stands Colorado with its $18,249,172, and at the foot is Tennessee with $1,998. Colorado stands first also in point of silver production. The only New England state whose name occurs on the list is New Hampshire, and the value of its yield was $26,999. California is second to Colorado and Nevada third. These three states in connection with Alaska, Arizona, Idaho, Oregon, Utah and Washington territory constitute the Pacific division, and their product is more than one-half the grand total, being $44,645,406. The states lying east of the Mississippi, which embraces the eastern division, yielded but $289,226, while the Rocky mountain division, composed of Colorado, Dakota, Montana, New Mexico and Wyoming show $27,795,675.

From these tables is excluded the gold nuggets and ore annually added to the cabinets of collectors, which, with the silver similarly appropriated, may be estimated at $200,000. It is to be observed that there is a great reduction in the present figures of Nevada's silver return over those of past years, which is explained by the falling off of the Comstock lode. In 1876 that mine alone yielded $18,002,906 in gold and $20,570,078 in silver, while four years later the value of the yield of both metals was but $6,922,830. The vast deposits of auriferous gravel in California continue to be very rich, and will not soon be exhausted, though the attempt now making to stop the deposit of mining debris in the valleys may check the hydraulic operations on the mountain slopes. Nevada and New Mexico contain numerous similar deposits, which are not worked for want of water. In what is known as the Tombstone district of Arizona there is a marked impulse in mining, and Arizona can claim the honor of having produced the richest ore, averaging $701 gold and $8624 silver per ton. Of the total gold product of the world 64 per cent. came from deep mines, and the balance from hydraulic, placer, drift and river mines. The entire coinage in the United States from 1793 to 1880 was $1,428,719,926, of which $1,139,103,922 was gold. During the year ending June 30, 1880, the amount of precious metal consumed in the arts was $51,000,000, one-third of this being silver.

If people in the United States should ever become restive because of the supposed burdens borne by them for the support of rulers, they would find great consolation in the thought that tax-payers in European countries suffer infinitely worse. The president of the United States receives a salary of $50,000 per year. The queen of Great Britain receives from the civil list $2,000,000 per year. The princess royal (crown princess of Prussia) receives an annuity of $40,000; the prince of Wales, $200,000; the princess of Wales, $50,000; the duke of Edinburgh, $125,000; the duke of Connaught, $155,000; the Princess Helena, $30,000; the Princess Louise, $30,000; the Princess Mary of Teck (cousin of the queen), $25,000; the Princess Augusta (another cousin), $15,000; the Duke of Cambridge (another cousin), in addition to military pay, $60,000; the Duchess of Cambridge, $15,000; Prince Leopold, $125,000; and the Princess Beatrice (soon to be the wife of Leopold), $30,000. Here is a sum of nearly $3,000,000 per annum paid for the nominal services of one executive ruler and for the idleness of a swarm of other people whose only claim to support from the tax-payers is their remote chance that one of them may, each quarter or half century, be called to the possession of the crown. Is it any wonder that there are Bradlaughs, and Parnells, and Dillons in Great Britain?

Some very well meaning people were recently shocked at revelations made by the thirteenth annual report of the Massachusetts bureau of labor statistics, showing the indifference of voters on occasions of important elections. It is shown that in 1875 only 49 per cent. of the voting population of that state voted at that election, so that officers were chosen to administer the affairs of the state by a minority of the electors. Worse than this: Last year an amendment to the constitution of the state was submitted to a popular vote, and declared adopted, when only 13 per cent. of the whole voting population took part in the election, and the amendment was carried by only seven per cent. of the voters. We have no wish to alarm people who have hitherto regarded the political institutions of the United States secure, but will simply state a historical fact, viz.: that it is no uncommon occurrence for important motions, resolutions and bills to pass in either branch of congress, without a single vote being cast for or against such motions, resolutions or bills. It was assumed in such cases of congressional legislation that silence gave consent, and the presiding officers took the responsibility of deciding upon which side the silence most largely preponderated.

The Tribune and Register of South Bend, Indiana, where Schuyler Colfax lives, recently suggested his name for a congressional nomination, and the cry was enthusiastically taken up throughout the district. Mr. Colfax has declined "gratefully and respectfully but positively and inflexibly." So that's the end of it.

Ye who have votes to cast need not prepare to cast them just yet. Half of you are saying with more or less emphasis that you are not going to vote your party tickets; but you will come up in June and do it, all the same.

In Ohio the legislature has become so honest and virtuous as to "reprimand" its members for soliciting bribes. How would it do to expel the offenders? To the legislative mind the fault is evidently a venial one.

A French financial journal, the Bourse, publishes the following severe and just criticism of New York stock jobbing methods:

> When we read the reports of the meeting of the New York stock exchange on the 28th ult., we are bound to confess that it is as difficult to judge that market at a distance as to decipher hieroglyphs. The railway stocks are in the hands of men in regard to whom the market is utterly powerless. In Europe the leading financial authorities look after their markets in the same manner as a mother attends to the whims and fancies of a spoiled child. But the case is altogether different with the New York financial magnates, Messrs. Gould and Vanderbilt make use of every possible and imaginable piece of cunning to make victims; in fact they display an ability which would hardly be tolerated in Europe. These maneuvres, far from being condemned by the press, are extolled as flashes of genius. On the whole, we are of opinion that it is preferable to leave the American market to the natives, for to transact business in a regular manner on the New York market from here must necessarily lead to losses.

CURIOSITIES OF THE CENSUS.

The Nativity of the Population of a Number of the States.

The latest bulletin issued by the census bureau reports the nativities of the inhabitants of Arkansas, Colorado, Connecticut, Dakota, Idaho, Nevada, New Hampshire, and South Carolina. Of the population of Connecticut 492,708 are native born, and of these, excluding colored, 391,097 were born in the state, 36,070 were born in New York, and 22,255 were born in Massachusetts. No other state has contributed to her population more than 8,207, which is Rhode Island's quota. The foreign born population is 129,992 of which Ireland contributed over 70,000, and Germany, England, and Canada, each between 15,000 and 16,000.

Of New Hampshire's native population of 300,697, 242,337, not counting the colored, were born in the state. Of the rest, 20,524 were from Massachusetts, Vermont 14,999, Maine 14,112, and no other state more than 4000. The foreign born population is 46,294, of which 25,763 were from Canada, and 13,052 from Ireland.

The states which have contributed to Dakota's native born population are, in order, Wisconsin, New York, Minnesota, and Iowa. The foreign population is chiefly from the following places in the order of number: Norway, Canada, Russia, Germany, Ireland and Sweden.

American immigrants to Idaho are, in order of number, from Utah, Missouri, New York, Illinois and Ohio. The foreign from China, England, Ireland and Germany, the Chinese being almost precisely one-third of all the foreign born.

To Nevada's native born population California and New York have contributed over 30,000 each, and six other states, including Maine and Massachusetts, over 10,000. The foreigners are mostly from China, Ireland, England and Canada.

To the population of Arkansas, Tennessee has contributed more than any other state, and of the nine states specified not one is a northern state. There are only about 10,000 foreigners in the state, and Germany and Ireland supply more than half of them.

To Colorado's population New York has contributed more than any other state. Illinois, Missouri, Ohio, Pennsylvania and New Mexico follow in order. There are more Englishmen than any other foreigners. Irish, Germans and Canadians follow in order.

The states that have contributed most to swell South Carolina's population, are in order North Carolina, Georgia, Virginia and New York. A majority of those from Georgia and Virginia are colored. There are less than 8000 foreigners, of whom the majority are Germans and Irish. One hundred and twenty-three native Africans are enumerated in the state.

Miss Meeker on the Indian Question.

Miss Meeker, one of the survivors of the White river agency massacre, whose horrible treatment as a captive of Chief Douglass has heretofore been stated, is delivering a series of lectures, in which she repeats the particulars of that atrocious affair, besides making such suggestions for the improvement in Indian treatment as were derived from her experience at the agency. The public which had lost sight of Chief Douglass, are informed by Miss Meeker that he was imprisoned for a time at Fort Leavenworth, and then released—dismissed without punishment, or even a trial. Miss Meeker favors the abolition of the Indian bureau entirely, and the placing of the management of the tribes under the war department. On this head she says:

> There is too much machinery in the Indian bureau. It hampers immediate action. Had Thornburg been acting under the war department instead of the Indian bureau, he could have prevented the massacre of Meeker. As it was he was compelled to wait till the Indians attacked him before he could fire a shot. Victorio, during the last year of his life, murdered four hundred whites, and, though our troops had him captive three times, he was released each time. It is to the interest of the Indian bureau to perpetuate the savage. Eighteen million dollars are spent every year on the Indians, of which less than $2,000,000 ever reach them.

They Won't Throw Away the Trade.

Chicago Tribune.

A Washington "sentimental" dispatch says:

> Members of the Chinese legation repeat the assertion sent you two days ago that the passage of the bill virtually ends commercial relations between China and the United States.

This is the sheerest of Bosh. The "Celestials" will continue to sell our traders all the tea, silk, and firecrackers which it is possible to induce them to buy at the highest prices that the cunning Mongolian merchants can exact from them. The passage of the bill stopping the traffic in coolies by the "Six Companies" of Chinese exporters will not affect the trade relations of the two countries one dollar. The Chinese will continue as heretofore to purchase almost nothing from us. And we, as heretofore, will continue to purchase whatever firecrackers, raw silk, and teas we need from them, and pay for the same in silver coin, as we always have done. The Australians have recently forbidden the introduction of coolies into the British colonies of that great island; and that fact has not cut the Chinese government to prohibit commerce either with Great Britain or Australia. Trade goes on just as briskly as before the interdiction of the coolies. The English sell opium and cotton goods to the Chinese to an enormous amount, and take their pay in tea, silk and gimcracks—paying only the balance of trade, as we do, in silver dollars.

Hub Punch is an incomparable beverage, uniting old liquors and choice fruits, and whether used with hot or cold water, is equally fine for the use of guests in the holiday season, and at all seasons.

Sold by all Grocers, Wine Merchants and Druggists. Trade supplied by Richards & Harrison, Agents for Pacific Coast, San Francisco.

GOOD FOR SORE EYES.
THIS IS TO CERTIFY THAT IN JUNE, 1881, I had acute inflammation in my eyes and in spite of all the surgical aid I received, in Oregon my eyes continued to get worse, until at length I became helplessly blind. In August I went to San Francisco and was under the treatment of two oculists of considerable repute. One was a professor of diseases of the eye, and I remained under his care one month, but continuing to get worse, I changed to another so-called specialist, to find I was only jumping out of the frying-pan into the fire. I next consulted Dr. Pardee, 21 Eddy street, San Francisco. His treatment relieved me from the very first and I continued to improve day by day, until I could see to read as well as any one. I found his treatment both simple and mild, different from any and all other treatments I had received. My residence is in Astoria, Oregon. Insert this card at my own expense for pure gratitude to Dr. Pardee, and I would say to any similarly afflicted know where to go to get their eyes cured, as I have been through the mill and speak from a sad experience. TUESDAY MORNING, APRIL 18, 1882.

CITY.

Smallpox in the Insane Asylum.—About three months ago a case of smallpox appeared in the insane asylum, which, by the prompt and intelligent action of the attending physicians, was arrested and confined to a single case. On Saturday last it appeared again in mild varioloid in a ward remote from the one where it first appeared. The cases affected were promptly removed and cared for elsewhere, and all the sanitary measures known to the profession adopted to prevent its further spread. No new symptoms have appeared since, and it is believed by the attending physicians that its spread has been arrested

Oregon Game Abroad.—Mr. A. Y. Hamilton, who sent a buck and doe with 16 Oregon quail to Cumbesnethan, on the Clyde, received a letter not long since acknowledging the receipt of them. The deer arrived in good health, but six of the quail died on the voyage. The deer were put on a range and seemed to be doing well, and were quite docile. The quail upon being turned loose immediately joined a flock of partridges, and not long after began to breed. The letter states that the quail were quicker in their movements and flew with more rapidity than the English partridge.

Land League Meeting.—The Irish land league meeting in Red Men's hall was largely attended on Sunday. In addition to the varied vocal and literary exercises very excellent instrumental music, in solos and duets, by Miss Crowley and Misses Murphy and Hanley was introduced. A donation of $114 was received from friends on the line of the N. P. R. R., as also $20 from Mr. Kimmenstal, old Mexican veteran in Vancouver. Quite a number signed the roll as new members and the attendance of ladies was very large.

Blanket Thief.—H. Rothios, proprietor of the New York hotel, yesterday had a man who has been stopping at the house arrested on a charge of stealing two pairs of blankets from the hotel. He was taken before Justice Bushwiler, where he gave his name as John O'Brien, and was found guilty and fined $50. Being unable to pay the fine, he will serve 25 days in the county jail. His true name is said to be Whitty. It is said he is the same party who was sentenced to the penitentiary about a year and a half ago for grand larceny.

Theft from a Schooner.—William White was yesterday arrested, charged with larceny of a pair of marine glasses from the schooner James A. Garfield. Captain Starr, the master, preferred the charge, and makes positive statement of the defendant having stolen the property. White was taken before Judge Stearns in the police court, where he waived examination and was bound over to appear before the grand jury in the sum of $500. He was unable to furnish the required bond, and was taken to the county jail.

General Row.—Alexander Hunter was arrested yesterday afternoon, charged with assault and battery upon Michael McNulty, the complainant. He was arraigned in Justice Petrain's court, where he plead not guilty and was released under $20 bonds. Adam Hunter was also arrested later in the day for threatening to kill. McNulty says Adam Hunter drew a pistol from his pocket and threatened to kill him. He was arraigned and released on his own recognizance. Both parties will be tried to-day.

Getting Ready.—The following well known republicans, most of them delegates to the state convention, are registered at various hotels in the city: Major D. L. Moomaw, of Baker county; W. J. Snodgrass and D. W. Lichtenthaler, of Union; O. S. Moore, of Lake; Max Muller, of Jackson, F. Page Tustin, of Umatilla; Thos. Monteith and Capt. N. B. Humphrey, of Linn; J. Q. A. Bowlby, of Astoria, and W. L. Boise, city editor of the Salem Statesman.

Vancouver Favors Schools.—Last Saturday the enterprising citizens of Vancouver—women and men—walked up to the polls and voted on the question of "tax" or "no tax," on a 10-mill assessment to go towards building a $10,000 school house. It resulted in a victory for the free school friends, as follows: For tax, 208; against, 13. Vancouver is following the example set by Portland, and closely imitated by Walla Walla and Seattle.

Insane Patient.—John Wisdom, an insane man, was brought to the city yesterday evening en route to Steilacoom. He is unmarried, about forty years old and has been a resident of Columbia Co., W. T., for many years. His insanity is of a most violent form, making it necessary to keep him heavily ironed during the trip. H. G. Minch has charge of him and leaves on this morning's boat with the patient.

Found a Home.—The foundling who was left on the door-step of Mr. Andrew Cambroes Sunday night seems to have fallen into good hands. Mrs. Cambroes, upon finding that the owner of the child did not turn up, expressed the determination of adopting the little waif, and has already begun her parental duties. Her first move toward raising the child has been the purchase of a cow.

Injury to Personal Property.—Martin Kaufield was yesterday arrested by Constable Gradt, on complaint of Mrs. Gallagher, who lives in the north end of town. She charges him with malicious injury to personal property by tearing down a shed belonging to her. He was tried in Justice Petrain's court, but the case was continued until 10 o'clock this morning.

Waived Examination.—Jacob Anderson and William J. Daley, who are charged with confiscating a package containing $240 sent to a Mrs. Hall in Daley's care, were arraigned in Justice Davis' court yesterday afternoon. They waived examination and had their bonds fixed at $1000 each. They cannot furnish bail and are now confined in the county jail.

Case Dismissed.—Espiridion Barrios, a Mexican, was yesterday arraigned for examination in Justice Davis' court on a charge of seduction. A satisfactory agreement was entered into between the interested parties and upon motion of the prosecuting attorney the case was dismissed. Barrios promised to make amends by marrying the girl.

Arm Broken.—L. Brown an employee of the O. & C. R. R., at the car shops on the east side, while engaged Saturday in replenishing the water tank on tender, stepped backward, made a miscalculation of the distance and fell about eight feet. He struck with violence against some iron rails and fractured his left arm above the wrist.

Recovered.—Dan Dineen, who had his skull fractured so that his brain protruded, about four months ago at the gas works dock, has so far recovered as to appear on the streets. His mind is still somewhat dazed from the effects of the shock, but his friends hope that his mental faculties will not be permanently impaired.

Resigned.—Mr. G. F. Augmus, one of the wardens of the East Portland insane asylum, resigned his position Saturday, and will go into some other business at an early date. Mr. Augmus has been connected with the institution for fifteen or sixteen years, and has made an efficient and faithful officer.

Commissioners' Court.—The county commissioners yesterday ordered that a warrant for $500 on account be issued to DeBurg, who has the contract of building the addition to the county court house. Also that the delinquent tax on the school property of Bishop Morris be remitted.

The Oregon's Cargo.—The Oregon, which is due to-night, brings 120 cabin passengers, 484 in the steerage and 1818 tons of freight, 105 tons of which is for Astoria. The number of passengers and quantity of freight is now limited only by the capacity of steamers.

Fatal Accident.—Yesterday morning a construction train on the O. R. & N. railroad ran into a hand car on tunnel No. 2 and instantly killed one of the laborers. His name could not be ascertained.

Strike Ended.—The longshoremen in the employ of the O. R. & N. Co. went back to work yesterday at old wages. The question of wages for night and Sunday work has not been adjusted.

Fighters Fined.—Frank Kealick, who was arrested on a charge of fighting, was arraigned in the police court yesterday and fined $15, which was paid.

Made a Citizen.—Lucreste Stevens a native of Russia was yesterday admitted to citizenship in the county court.

A SAILOR'S SUICIDE.

Harry Fredericksen, better known as "Big Harry," Jumps from the Storm King and is Drowned.

SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE OREGONIAN.

Astoria, April 17.—Harry Fredericksen who signed articles and shipped on the Storm King last Friday, jumped overboard and was drowned last evening. The ship was lying in stream off Smith's Point. A fishing boat was passing when Fredericksen jumped overboard. The mate ordered the second mate and men to lower ship's boat, which was hanging at the davits, and pick the man up, then seized a rifle and declared he would shoot of the men in the fishing boat if they picked up the man, who was swimming to them. When the ship's boat was about 50 feet from him he sank and was seen no more. His drowning has created some excitement in town, and it is thought the men in the fishing boat might have saved him. It was reported the man was shanghaied aboard, but this is denied by Capt. Reed, who says he signed articles in the custom house when sober, and he paid $20 advance and $40 blood money for him.

Big Harry, as he was called, was well known here, having fished several seasons for the Humes. The Storm King has been ready for sea two weeks, but was delayed for want of a crew.

WRECK OF THE MARY TATHAM.

The British steamer Mary Tatham, which sailed from Hongkong March 28th for Portland with a cargo of Chinese laborers and merchandise, is reported wrecked off the coast of China. The crew were saved, but ship and cargo are supposed to be a total loss.

The Mary Tatham has been plying in the China trade between San Francisco and Hongkong for some time, and upon her recent arrival at the latter port was chartered for Portland, and was expected to arrive during May. She was consigned to John McCraken & Co.

BRIEF MENTION.

The Oregon due to-night.

The steamer Yaquina will sail for Tillamook, Yaquina and Coos bay next Monday, the 24th.

W. SCHEFFLER'S PURE WINES AND BRANDY.

It is universally conceded that Wm. Scheffler's St. Helena (Cal.) Sherry, Port, Amber, Riesling and Claret wines, as also his vacuum distilled pure Grape Brandy are really superior to other manufactures, not excepting that imported, the adulterations and impurities of which is now generally understood. Mr. Scheffler's goods are popularly known all over the Pacific coast. Eight-tenths of all the druggists in California, Oregon and Washington territory have adopted his goods, discarding the imported. Ask your druggist here in Portland, East Portland, or in any town, in this northwest, and you will be quite sure to obtain it, as you will at most of the first-class hotels and bars. Mr. Scheffler's Wines and Sanitary Brandy have been steadily growing into favor until they are known well in almost every household as a medicine, if not otherwise. Mr. Scheffler's process of distilling in a vacuum is his own patent process, which relieves his brandy of the fusil oil, making it really pure, sanitary and healthful.

THE "HOME."

The Needs of the Institution—A Block of Land and a Larger Building Imperatively Demanded.

The ladies of the Relief Society who have devoted so much time and worked so hard to maintain the Home in this city, find the task growing on their hands, and that they make no complaint or the response on the part of the benevolent citizens of Portland to former appeals for aid, it has become apparent that more extensive grounds and buildings will have to be provided at an early day, or some of the little waifs that seek shelter, food and clothing in their institution will have to be turned away and left to the dreariness of life in the county almshouse, or thrown upon the "cold charity" of the outside world. There are now 28 children in the Home, making with the people who take care of them, 31 persons, who have to occupy five bedrooms. The piece of ground on which the present building stands is also too small for the purpose. Before the city began such rapid growth, the lots and blocks adjacent were vacant and breathing room was ample, but buildings are now crowding all around the Home, shutting out the sunlight and filling the former playgrounds of the little ones. Another location must be had and a larger building erected at once, for applications for admission are increasing in number and it is expected that of 13 children now cared for elsewhere, the Ladies' Relief Society will very soon be compelled to take a greater part. The society is doing a work for God and humanity, a work that is done more cheaply than the taxpayers could have it done were it directly under control of the officials of the county or city, and the ladies are doing it far better. To secure grounds and put up buildings will require a large manifestation of benevolence on the part of the citizens of Portland, but we believe the call which, it is now expected will soon be made, will be met by a response that will even astonish the members of the society who are already so well convinced of the generosity of the wealthy citizens of Portland. Two gentlemen have already signified their willingness to give $1000 each if enough can be secured to obtain a full block or more of land and to erect suitable buildings. Who of our land owners in Portland will donate the land and thus cause to be reared to their memory for generousness an imperishable monument?

CONCERNING MARRIED SOLDIERS.

The following circular has recently been issued:

The enlistment or re-enlistment of married men will not be made without first obtaining special authority therefor from the adjutant general's office.

As allowances are no longer granted the families of enlisted men, and changes of station of troops frequently occasion great expense to the married soldier, and hardship to those dependent upon him, their re-enlistment should not be encouraged.

To enable such soldiers to provide homes, take up claims, and secure employment on the expiration of their term of enlistment, when it shall seem judicious, they shall be granted such furloughs or indulgences as may be considered expedient and consistent with existing orders and regulations.

The quarters vacated by married soldiers on their discharge shall be taken down, and the material therefrom used in the repairs of permanent barracks.

MILITARY EXAMINATION.

In conformity with the requirements of army regulations, a board of officers has been appointed to meet at Vancouver barracks, W. T., at 11 o'clock, A. M., on Monday, May 1st, or as soon thereafter as practicable, to examine and report upon the qualifications of such non-commissioned officers as may be properly authorized to appear before it, as candidates for appointment as 2d lieutenant. A separate report will be rendered in each case examined.

The detail for the board is as follows: Col. Frank Wheaton, 2d infantry; Capt. Albert G. Forse, 1st cavalry; Capt. Frank D. Baldwin, 5th infantry; Capt. Edwin F. Gardner, medical department; 1st Lieut. Henry H. Pierce, adjutant 21st infantry.

THE SONG OF STEAM

Crawfordsville (Ind.) Journal

All through [illegible] Mr Cutter [illegible] story has passed [illegible] recording a [illegible] correctly the future [illegible] steam was first published in the [illegible] at Washington. Afterwards it was [illegible] the leading newspapers in this country and in Europe [illegible] have been everywhere [illegible] of the century. [illegible] Mr Cutter at Terre Haute [illegible] At one session of the legislature he was a representative from Vigo county. [illegible] The Song of Steam was [illegible] Mr Cutter [illegible] will [illegible] rank high [illegible] writings. The Song of Steam will be seen. The great mission of steam in the world's business was [illegible] foreshadowed.

The National Tribune, [illegible] publishing it as far back as [illegible] said of it:

The following poem has [illegible] years ago) published in this paper [illegible] to the author then unknown to us. It has [illegible] been copied and praised in Europe, particularly in Blackwood's Magazine, in which it has been pronounced the best lyric of the century. We were recently apprised of its being the production of [illegible] W. Cutter [illegible] volume of poems by him and about being published. The poem is as follows:

THE SONG OF STEAM.

Harness me down with your iron bands,
Be sure of your curb and rein;
For I scorn the strength of your puny hands
As the tempest scorns a chain.
How I laughed as I lay concealed from sight
For many a countless hour,
At the childish boast of human might,
And the pride of human power.

When I saw an army upon the land,
A navy upon the seas,
Creeping along, a snail-like band,
Or waiting the wayward breeze;
When I marked the peasant fairly reel
With the toil which he faintly bore,
As he feebly turned at the tardy wheel,
Or tugged at the weary oar;

When I measured the panting courier's speed,
The flight of the carrier-dove,
As they bore the law a king decreed,
Or the lines of impatient love—
I could not but think how the world would feel
As these were outstripped afar,
When I should be bound to the rushing keel
Or chained to the flying car!

Ha, ha, ha! they found me at last,
They invited me forth at length,
And I rushed to my throne with a thunder blast
And laughed in my iron strength.
O then ye saw a wondrous change
On the earth and ocean wide,
Where now my fiery armies range,
Nor wait for wind and tide.

Hurrah! hurrah! the waters o'er
The mountains steep decline;
Time—space—have yielded to my power;
The world—the world is mine!
The rivers the sun hath earliest blest
Or those where his beams decline,
The giant streams of the queenly West,
And the Orient floods divine.

The ocean pales where'er I sweep,
To hear my strength rejoice,
And the monsters of the briny deep
Cower, trembling, at my voice.
I carry the wealth and the ore of Earth,
The thoughts of the godlike mind;
The wind lags after my flying breath,
And lightning is left behind.

In the darksome depths of the fathomless mine
My tireless arm doth play,
Where the rocks never saw the sun's decline,
Or the dawn of the glorious day.
I bring Earth's glittering jewels up
From the hidden caves below,
And I make the fountain's granite cup
With a crystal gush o'erflow.

I blow the bellows, I forge the steel
In all the shops of trade,
I hammer the ore, and turn the wheel
Where my arms of strength are made.
I manage the furnace, the mill, the mint—
I carry, I spin, I weave;
And all my doings I put in print
On every Saturday eve.

I've no muscles to weary, no breast to decay,
No bones to be "laid on the shelf,"
And soon I intend you may "go and play,"
While I manage the world by myself.
But harness me down with your iron bands,
Be sure of your curb and rein,
For I scorn the strength of your puny hands,
As the tempest scorns a chain!

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST.

"Oh, mother, mother, I am so tired!"

"Cheer up my child, we have not very far to go. Come closer, let me brush the dew from your curls. Now take my hand."

But the child hung back, sobbing with weariness and exhaustion, and the pale young mother, bending over her in the vain attempt to soothe the hysterical excitement, did not hear the rumble of advancing wheels until they passed close to her and a rough, hearty voice exclaimed:

"What ails the little girl? Ain't sick, is she?"

Mary Ellsworth had never seen farmer Raynesford before; yet the moment her eyes rested on his wrinkled, sun-burned face with the shaggy brows overshadowing kind eyes she felt that he was a friend, and made answer promptly:

"Not sick, sir, but very tired. We have walked a long way."

"Got much further to go?" asked the farmer, tickling his horse's ear with the end of his whip.

"To Breckton."

Mr. Raynesford gave a low whistle.

"That's four miles off, and the little gal is pretty nigh used up already."

"I know it," said the woman with a sigh, "but I have no money to hire a lodging nearer. In Breckton I hope to obtain work in the factory."

Farmer Raynesford gave the seat of his wagon a thump with his whip-handle that made old Bonny drop the mouthful of clover he was nibbling from the roadside and prick up his ears in astonishment.

"I won't hear of no such thing!" said he energetically. "Why, that child can't go twenty rods farther! Here, get in along with me. You won't be none the worse for a bit of supper and a good night's rest. I know Hannah'll scold," he muttered, as he lifted the little girl to his side, and extended his hand to the mother; "but I can't see folks perishin' by the wayside and never offer to help 'em. I don't care if she scolds the roof of the house off."

He drove rapidly along, making occasional interjectional remarks to his horse, while Mrs. Ellsworth drew her thin shawl around the little golden head that already drooped drowsily upon her shoulder, and thought with a deep sensation of gratitude upon the shelter Heaven had provided her in her sorest strait.

It was an odd shaped old farm-house, gray with the storms of nearly half a century, with a broad door in one, overhung by giant lilac bushes, and a kitchen where even in the bloomy month of June a great fire roared up the wide-throated chimney, and shining rows of tins winked and glittered at every upward leap of the flames.

Mr. Raynesford jumped out of the wagon, threw the reins over a post, and went in to conciliate his domestic despot.

"Look here, Hannah," said he, to a tall angular-looking female who emerged from a pantry near by, her face nearly or quite as sour as the saucer of pickles she was carrying. "Jest set a couple more plates on the table, will you? I've brought home a woman and a little gal I found a piece below, e'en a'most tired to death. They was calculatin' to walk on to Breckton, but I thought it wouldn't hurt us to keep 'em over night."

"I'm astonished at you, Job Raynesford," said his better half, in a tone of indignant remonstrance. "We might just as well hang out a tavern sign at once and done with it, you're always bringing home some poor, miserable creetur or other and"—

"There, there, Hannah," interrupted Mr. Raynesford, "I'm always willing to hear to you when you're anyway reasonable, but it goes clear ag'in my grain to see poor folks a sufferin and never stretch out a helpin' hand. 'Taint accordin' to natur nor 'taint human natur'."

"Well, go your own gait, Job Raynesford," responded his wife, tartly. "Only mark my words, if you don't end your days in the poor house, 'twon't be through no fault o' yourn!"

She shut the pantry door with a bang that made all the jelly-cups and milk pans rattle, while Job, with an odd grimace, went out to help his guests to alight.

"Don't mind my old woman," said he apologetically, as Mrs. Ellsworth sprang to the ground. "She's kind o' sharp-spoken, but she means well after all. We ain't just alike in our notions, you know."

"If all the world were like you, sir," said the young widow, with tears in her eyes, "there would be less want and suffering by far."

Farmer Raynesford pretended not to hear, he was busy lifting little Mary out.

"Set on them blackberries, Hannah," said he toward the close of the evening meal. "The little gal's so tired she can't eat nothin' solid."

"I was calculating to keep them blackberries for the donation party to-morrow," said Mrs. Raynesford, rising with rather an unwilling air.

"Nonsense!" quoth the farmer with a broad laugh. "I'm having a donation party of my own to-night. Here, I'll take one. See if those berries don't put some color into your cheeks."

All the evening little Mary sat by the hearth with her hands in her mother's and her large blue eyes fixed earnestly upon the kind farmer's face.

"What are you thinking about, dearest?" asked Mrs. Ellsworth once. She drew a long sigh and whispered:

"Oh mamma, he is so kind to us!"

When Mary Ellsworth and her little girl set off the next morning upon their long walk to Breckton, Job Raynesford went with them [illegible] fumbling uneasily in his pocket and [illegible] around to make sure that Hannah was not within [illegible] distance. When Mary extended her hand to say [illegible] to her astonishment [illegible] was thrust into it.

[illegible]

"[illegible]" [illegible] I [illegible] saw.

The [illegible] farm house [illegible] April [illegible] and that [illegible] with [illegible] among the [illegible] of [illegible] wrinkles [illegible] his mouth and [illegible] years brought troubles [illegible] to the [illegible] old man.

"Twenty years," mused he, one bright June morning, "it don't seem possible, Hannah, that it was twenty years ago this very day that I caught that ugly fall from the hay rack and got lame for life."

He looked down at the crutches by his side as he spoke and sighed from the very bottom of his heart.

Hannah stood in the doorway tossing corn to a forlorn little [illegible] of chickens. Twenty years had not improved her in any respect; she was gaunter [illegible] and [illegible] faced than ever.

"Yes," said she slowly, "and perhaps you don't remember that it was just twenty years ago to-day that you threw ten dollars away on that woman and her child. I told you that you'd end your days in the poor house, and I don't see but what my prediction is likely to come true. Didn't I say you would live to repent it?"

"I won't deny, Hannah," said the old man, "but that I've done a good many things I've been sorry for—we ain't none of us perfect, you know, wife—but that is not one of them. No, I never for a minute repented being kind to the widow and fatherless."

Hannah shrugged her shoulders, but made no reply.

"Didn't you say you were going up to see the rich lawyer about the five thousand dollars to-day?" she asked, presently.

"Yes, but I don't suppose it'll be much use. If he'd wait a little, I'd do my best to please him. Jones says he'll be sure to sell the old place from over our heads, however they tell me he's a hard man. I mean to explain to him just how the matter stands and—"

"I told you how it would be long ago," ejaculated Hannah, unable to restrain her vexation. "What on earth ever possessed you to sign for Jesse Fairweather?"

"I s'posed he was an honest man, and I wouldn't see an old friend wronged."

"Fiddlesticks!" exclaimed Mrs. Raynesford. "That's just your calculation, Job. There—Zeke has brought the wagon. Do start off or you'll be too late for the York train."

And Job meekly obeyed, only too happy to escape from the endless discord of his wife's rolling tongue.

The rays of the noonday sun streamed brightly through the stained glass casements of Mr. Everleigh's Gothic library. The room was decorated with appurtenances of wealth and taste. Velvet chairs with tall backs of daintily carved rosewood were scattered here and there, marble vases occupied niches beside the doorway, and the rarest pictures hung on the panelled and gilded wall. But the prettiest object of all—the one which the rich lawyer oftenest raised his eyes from the writing to contemplate with an involuntary smile of pride and affection—was a lovely woman in a white cashmere morning robe trimmed with velvet, who stood opposite arranging flowers in a bouquet. She wore a spray of berries carved of pink Neapolitan coral at her throat, and tiny pendants of the same rare stone in her shell-like ears, and the slender waist was tied around with a pink ribbon.

"There, Walter, isn't that pretty?" she asked, holding up her completed bouquet.

"Very pretty," he answered, looking not at the roses or geraniums, but directly at the blue eyes and golden curls of his beautiful young wife.

"You are not even noticing it," she pouted.

"Because I see something so much better worth looking at," he said playfully.

"Do you really love me so very much?" she asked, throwing down the flowers and coming around to his side.

He rose and drew her caressingly toward him.

"My dearest, you are more precious to me than the whole world besides!"

She let her head rest for a moment on his shoulder, and when she raised it, there was a tear on her eyelashes.

"Oh, Walter, if mamma could only see how happy we are!"

There was a knock at the door. Mrs. Everleigh slipped from her husband's arm with the prettiest blush in the world, and was very busy with her flowers when the rich lawyer's "right hand man" put his grizzled head into the room.

"The old man wants to see you about that Fairweather business."

"Show him in. Don't looked so disappointed, love," he said as the grizzled head disappeared. "I shall not be detained three minutes, and the horses are at the door."

Mary Everleigh never troubled her pretty little head about business matters, so she never looked up as the halting sound of old Mr. Raynesford's crutch echoed on the carpet. But the instant he spoke she started as if an arrow had smitten her, and her slender hands clasped together, listening as intently as though her life depended on hearing every word. The old man was pleading and sorrowful—her husband politely inflexible. At length Job Raynesford turned to go.

"Well, sir," he said in a subdued tone, "I don't know much about law and law books, but it does seem hard that an old man should be turned out of the home that has sheltered him for sixty years, and all for no fault of his own. They say you are a very rich gentleman, sir—five thousand dollars may seem a small sum to you, but it is my all."

Mrs. Everleigh's soft voice broke the momentary silence that succeeded this appeal.

"Walter, come here one minute—I want to speak to you."

He obeyed, somewhat surprised. She drew him into a deep recess of stained glass window, and standing there with the rosy and amber shadows playing about her lovely brow like some fair pictured saint, she told him how twenty years ago a wearied child and its mother were fed and sheltered by a kind hearted stranger, how he had given them money and kind wishes when they were utterly alone and desolate in the wide world.

"But my love, what has all this to do with my business matters?"

"Much, Walter! I am that little child."

"You, my dearest?"

"I, my husband! and the noble man who, I am persuaded, saved my life that night, stands yonder, with gray bowed head and sinking heart!"

"Mary, you must surely be mistaken."

"I can not be mistaken, Walter. I should know him among a thousand. You said you loved me this morning—now grant me one little boon."

"What is it, dearest?"

"Give me that note he spoke of."

Mr. Everleigh silently went to a small ebony cabinet, unlocked it and drew out a folded paper which he placed in her hands. She glided up to the old man who had been gazing out of a window in a sort of reverie, and laid her soft hand on his arm.

"Do you remember the little golden haired Mary whom you found with her mother and [illegible] on the roadside twenty years ago?"

"Do I remember her, lady? It was but this very morning I was recalling the whole scene."

"And don't you recognize me?" she said, smiling up [illegible] "I am little Mary."

A LIFE'S ROMANCE.

Pitiful Death of a Woman who was Robbed of Two Millions.

Philadelphia Times.

Jane M. Manus, better known as Santiago, died at St. Mary's [illegible] last week. During her last illness [illegible] on the charity of her neighbors for the [illegible] of her life yet she was once the possessor of an independent fortune. Her husband was James M. Manus, a sugar and coffee planter of Venezuela. At the time she married him he owned two plantations at Caracas, and there the couple lived in luxury for years. During an outbreak of the natives the government troops [illegible] the entire property, entailing a great loss on the proprietor. For this destruction he entered [illegible] against the government, but before his death [illegible] promised for a consideration of $40 [illegible] this money neither he nor after his death his widow received a cent. After the death of Mr. M. Manus his widow sold their sugar plantation and received for it about $1,000,000. She was shortly afterwards robbed of this money, she said, and came to the United States dependent for a living on a small pension which she received for her husband, who had served in the Mexican war. She made repeated applications to the Venezuelan government for the settlement of her claims through [illegible] years here and the American consul at Venezuela. [illegible] in her attorney's hands her husband's will leaving everything to her and a number of letters from the Venezuelan and American consuls and from Earl Granville. Her claims has received a partial [illegible] and her attorneys are [illegible] of success.

Arthur's Way.

Garfield gave the majority faction of the republican party four members of the [illegible] stalwarts three. Arthur has given the majority [illegible] and the minority six. The Tribune further argues that Garfield's chief desire was to harmonize the republican party. Arthur's is to harmonize himself.

King of the Blood

Is not a "cure-all," it is a blood-purifier and tonic. Impurity of blood poisons the system, deranges the circulation, and thus induces many disorders known by different names to distinguish them according to effects, but being really phases of that great generic disorder, Impurity of Blood. Such are Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Constipation, Nervous Disorders, Headache, Backache, General Weakness, Heart Disease, Dropsy, Kidney Disease, Piles, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Scrofula, Skin Disorders, Pimples, Ulcers, Swellings, &c., &c. King of the Blood prevents and cures these by attacking the cause, Impurity of the Blood. Chemists and physicians agree in calling it "the most genuine and efficient preparation for the purpose." Sold by Druggists, $1 per bottle. See testimonials, directions, &c., in pamphlet, "Treatise on Diseases of the Blood," wrapped around each bottle.
